tirely out of harmony with the doctrines of the great founder of the Democratic party. For example in his letter to Joseph C. Cabell Thomas Jefferson said: "What has destroyed the liberty and the rights of man in every government which has ever existed under the sun? The generalizing and concentrating of powers into one body, no matter whether of the autocrats of Russia or France, or of the aristocrats of a Venetian Senate." This is what Thomas Jefferson thought about centralizing power. But the governor says that he is better qualified to appoint the local officials of a county or a township than are the people themselves qualified to elect. It is quite apparent that his theories and practices are totally at variance with the doctrines of Thomas Jefferson. At another time Jefferson said: "The elective government is the best permanent corrective of the errors or abuses of those entrusted with power." Yet under the well known theories of the present chief executive it is urged that by the adoption of some fantastic short ballot device the governor shall be given absolute power. The Treasurer of State, Attorney General, Secretary of State, and all other officials who under the present system are elected by the people, are to be removed from office by the chief executive. Thomas Jefferson says one thing, the present governor of Ohio takes exactly the opposite view. Choose your own chief executive, he says, and you will have in your hands the reins of government. "Our country is too large to have its affairs directed by a single government," he says. "The public servants at such a distance and from under the eye of their constituents, must from the circumstances of distance, be unable to administer and overlook all the details of government, and the management of the citizens; and the same circumstance, by rendering detection impossible to their constituents, invite the public agents to corruption, plunder and waste." Jefferson foresaw and in this eloquent paragraph foretold the dangers of great concentration of power. He understood that as the government was kept in the hands of the people they could keep a vigilant eye upon their servants and see to it that the public welfare was protected from corruption, profligacy or waste. But as soon as authority was concentrated in the hands of a few or one the inevitable tendency would be to disregard the people's rights, to waste their substance and to build up a system of autocracy that would have for its aim, not the people's good but its own perpetuation. This what Thomas Jefferson saw. Yet the present chief executive says: "Tax list officers must be under obligations to no one in the sub-division." If they are not to be under obligations to the people to whom they elect them and whom they serve that they should be under obligations to some central authority a hundred miles away, who is intent not upon reducing burdens of the people's taxes but upon collecting a constantly increasing amount of taxes in order that the tax spenders may be able to pay the interest not only in the tax gatherers but in the tax spenders and they want legislation that will eliminate at least a portion of the tax burden from the holders recently appointed under executive authority and thus make possible the reduction of the burdens of taxation. If as the governor says, "Tax list officers are not to be under obligations to no one in the local sub-division" by the same reasoning why can it not be held that township trustees are not to be under obligations to any one in local sub-division? Why will not the same reason apply to county auditors, to judges, in fact to all officers? If it is deemed proper to feel a sense of obligation to the people then by this course of reasoning it must ultimately be held that the governor shall appoint all officers, municipal, county and state. Thomas Jefferson in his letter to Madison said: "Preserve inviolate the fundamental principle, that the people are not to be taxed but by representatives chosen immediately by themselves." Yet the governor said in his recent address at Elyria "if equality in taxation is to be preserved, it is essential that the people should be free to do their duty they must be free from the obligations growing out of election by the people." Here again our present chief executive and the great founder of Democracy, Thomas Jefferson, are in conflict. The teachings of which one will it be safer to follow in the long run? A hundred years of experience make answer to this question superfluous.

One of the most interesting examples of the virtues of local self government in the history of the world is the development of the government of the New England townships. The most prominent idea in this form of government is expressed in the early days of New England history was the fact that the people chose directly all their own officials, levied their own taxes, provided their own local ordinances and attended to their own affairs generally. In speaking of this form of government Thomas Jefferson said: "These wards, called townships in New England, are the vital principle of their governments, and have proved themselves the wisest invention ever devised by the wit of man for the perfect exercise of self government and for its preservation." At another time he said: "As Cato then concluded every speech with the words, 'Cetero censeo delenda est Carthago' so I now conclude every opinion with the injunction, 'divide the counties into wards.' Jefferson believed in local self government. He believed that the officials should be chosen by the people and should be responsible to the people. The governor says that these local officers must be under obligations to no one in the local sub-division. He asserts that he can appoint through his agents better assessors than the people can elect. It is quite apparent that for the purpose of machine building appointive assessors and appointive license commissioners are more satisfactory than they would be if they were elected by the people. But the question is by which system are the people and their rights best protected. So far as I am concerned I prefer to follow the teachings of a hundred years of history and the doctrines of Thomas Jefferson with reference to local self government rather than the autocratic theories of our present chief executive. In this connection let me say that personally I entertain for the chief executive of the state the greatest respect and admiration for his personal regard. I came to admire him early when I went to the National House of Representatives. He was at that time a distinguished and able member of the great House Committee on Appropriations. Naturally the younger members of the House looked to him and to his Committee for guidance in matters pertaining to appropriations of public funds. I distinctly recall that that great Committee on Appropriations has charge of the supply bill of the government and of which committee the present governor of Ohio was—that time an able and eloquent member, always fought bitterly legislature is all this matter? The common opinion has been that the legislature is a portion of the government of the state. Upon what meat has this our Caesar fed that he has grown so great? I believe that the concept of the people of Ohio is that the legislative branch of the government is co-ordinate with the executive and they view with alarm and will punish with unerring retribution all attempts to swallow up the legislature in the executive. The present state administration promised the people home rule in government and home rule in taxation. It has deprived the people of both these rights. It has constantly engaged in machine building at the expense of the tax payer. The executive has encroached upon the legislative until the General Assembly has become a mere rubber stamp. One man power seems to be the dominant note in the song of the present state administration. All those who are opposed to this system of autocracy should unite without regard to former differences, forget past contests and this year win a tremendous victory for government by the people in Ohio.
